

Thesis Notes

Big idea: Magnitude of a metric space is large as t , some scale factor, gets large - t scales the metric, and as points get farther apart, they are "counted separately." On the other hand, hierarchical clustering records fewer clusters as r , a scale factor, gets large. What is the relationship between these two "counts of number of clusters?" Is magnitude even such a count?